EDMUND BURKE AND HIS HORSE.

Mr. Everett, in a speech, made recently on various subjects, has exhibited a remarkable versatility of talent. At one moment he pronounced the most pertinent remark by his disciples of fancy humor, and in the next he edified his hearers by his touching pathos. He seems to be thoroughly at home on every subject he handles, and he instructs while he delights his audience. We copy the following interesting and graphic passage from his speech at the Springfield Horse Fair:

"However this may be, sir, if there is any one who doubts that the horse—the animal which most concerns us on this occasion—is susceptible of the kindest feelings of our nature, I think he would be convinced of his error by a most interesting anecdote of Edmund Burke. In the decline of Mr. Burke's career at Beaconsfield, the rumor went up to London that he had been mad; and the fact that he was in support of this rumor was, that he went round his park kissing his cows and horses. A friend, a man of rank and influence, hearing this story, and deeming it of too much importance to be left uncorrected, hastened down to Beaconsfield, and sought an interview with the view of ascertaining the truth of the rumor. Entering into conversation with him, Mr. Burke read to him some chapters from his 'Letters on the Regicide.' His friend immediately went away, though the earthly refinement was verging back to its native dust, the lamp of reason and genius shone within with undiminished lustre. He was accordingly more than satisfied as to the object of his coming down, and in a private interview with Mr. Burke he told her what he had come for, and received from her this pathetic explanation: Mr. Burke's only child, a beloved son, had not long before died, leaving behind him a favorite horse, the companion of his excursions, of business and pleasure, when both were young and vigorous. This favorite animal was of course turned out by Mr. Burke, the father, into the park, with directions to all of his servants that he should in every respect be treated as a privileged favorite. Mr. Burke himself, of course, in his morning walks would often stop to caress the favorite animal. On one occasion, as he was taking his morning walk through the park, he perceived the poor old animal at a distance, and noticed that he was recognized by him. The horse drew nearer and nearer to Mr. Burke, stopped, eyed him with the most pleading look of recognition, which said as plainly as words could have said—'I have lost my toe!' and then the poor dumb best deliberately laid his head upon Mr. Burke's bosom! Struck by the singularity of the occurrence, struck by the recollection of his son whom he had never ceased to mourn with a grief that would not be comforted, overwhelmed by the tenderness of the animal, expressed in mute eloquence his holy Nature's universal language, the illustrious statesman for a moment lost his self-possession, clasping his arms around the neck of his son's favorite animal, lifted up that voice, which had caused the arches of Westminster Hall to echo the noblest strains that ever sounded within them, and wept aloud! Sir, this was seen, this was heard by the passers by, and the enemies of Burke, unappreciated by his domestic sorrow, made it a ground of charge of insanity. Burke is gone; but, sir, so help me Heaven, if I were called upon to designate the event of the period in Burke's life that would best sustain a charge of insanity, it would not be when, in a gush of the boldest and purest feeling that ever stirred the human heart, he was aloud on the neck of a dead son's favorite horse. But, sir, it should rather be when, at the meridian of his fame, when the orb of his imperial genius rose highest in the heavens, amidst the scold of ering courtiers, and the sneers of hireling patriots, he debased his glorious powers to the scurrilous and squabbling of the day and, 'Born for the universe, narrowed his mind, And to party gave up what was meant for mankind.' (Loud and prolonged cheering.)"

AN INCIDENT.

A touching case was presented yesterday to the consideration and charity of one of the Good Samaritans who now take care of the sick, relieve the destitute, and lead the straggling. A boy was discovered in the morning in the gross of Claiborne street, evidently bright and intelligent, but sick. A man who has the feeling of kindness strongly developed, went to him, shook him by the shoulder, and asked him what he was doing there—"Waiting for God to come for me," said he. "What do you mean?" said the gentleman, touched by the pathetic tone of the answer and the condition of the boy, in whose eyes and flushed face he saw the evidences of fever. "God sent for mother and father, and a little brother," said he, "and they took away to his home up in the sky, and mother told me when she was sick that God would take care of me. I have no God, no body to give me anything, and so I came out here, and have been looking so long up in the sky for God to come and take care of me, as mother said he would. He will come won't he? Mother never told me a lie, sir, but you have been so long on the way." What a lesson of trust, and how this incident shows the effect of never deceiving children with idle tales. As the poor mother expected when she told her son "God would take care of him," he did by touching the heart of this benevolent man with compassion and love to the little stranger.—N. O. Delta
